Hospitals in Rural India are vibrant, community-driven places with diverse professional challenges. Working here will fast-track your growth and learning.

Why we need this network

Health professionals who want to work in rural areas are handicapped by a chronic lack of information, and put off by an abundance of damning stereotypes about careers in rural India. Meanwhile, there is an acute shortage and growing need for healthcare professionals in rural areas. The solution, according to the Rural Hospital Network (RHN), is a free-to-access website that aims to connect health professionals with hospitals in need.

RHN was founded in 2021 and the first Hospitals were listed in August that year.

Recent graduates, mid-career and even retired professionals, do not know about careers in rural areas and the opportunity to serve those in need. There exist robust social lives and the chance to explore, live and work in remote areas. In this lies a deep fulfilment of seeing patients thrive and by making a real difference with your education, skills and care.

Our First Year!

Above is a graph showing the number of visits to the RHN site. Here are some of the recent features:

- A new FAQs section helps with answers to generic queries
- Practical Clinical Treatment Guidelines
- Fellowships and grants for serving in rural areas
- Visiting Consultancies
- Talks and Workshops

The Rural Hospital Network strives to serve as a reliable repository of information on healthcare in rural areas and poorer neighborhoods in cities.
